

XM Radio is a paid service just like satellite or cable TV. Just as millions of Americans spend countless hours watching television for entertainment and information, people on the go, especially the nations truck drivers, depend on XM Radio. Truck drivers are always on the move and satellite radio is their only means of always having up to date information at their fingertips regardless of their location. Broadcast radio stations don't have the ability to always reach those who are traveling on the road. Just as some households are in locations where they don't have access to broadcast television. I feel that this access to important information at all times, in all locations is a necessity for being informed about current situations such as traffic and weather.
